Introduction

Home of the artisans, base of power, the place where Kerala's culture and heritage are preserved and displayed at their finest; these and many other phrases have been used to describe Thiruvananthapuram. However, the divinity and aura of this place can only be experienced first hand, as the utter volume of history and lore surrounding the place is too immense. A city and its surroundings that has seen some of the most poignant moments in Kerala's history, it is from here that people can trace the path that has led to what Kerala is today.

Its name translates to 'The City of Lord Ananta', which is a reference to the presiding deity (Lord Vishnu) of the world famous Sree Padmanabhaswamy Temple. Scores of museums and libraries cover the landscape of the city, testament to many stories that chronicle how it managed to sustain its rustic charm. With the advent of modern infrastructure and technology, Thiruvananthapuram is among those rare locations where the original ethos of the land still stands strong. Our visitors fall in love with the many natural wonders that surround this area on all sides.

Kottur

Stay in the cottages of Kottur

An hour away from the capital city lies this picturesque location, famous for its marvellous Elephant Rehabilitation Centre that is a staple among visitors to the area. A 35 km drive, you're surrounded by dense forests on all sides, with each turn revealing noises and sounds that make for a very intensive stay in the wild. Stay for a night or two at Kappukad and let the majestic and turning trails here help you have a perfect adventure filled weekend. There are six cottages available here – Barbler, Peacock, Barbet, Robin, Koel and Hornbill. The accommodation is not inclusive of food, but the place has a good canteen which offers homely food to all of our guests.

Ecotourism

This planet we are on nurtures over 7 billion inhabitants on a daily basis. While its marvels are beyond the realm of any one person's imagination, it is easy to notice the damages that are being caused on each and every front, due to the rise in population and the spread of civilization. Even the uninhabited corners of Mother Earth are now being turned into urban centres, and this affects the fragile balance that has kept the planet afloat this entire time.

Tourism is a great bonding element, mixing and mashing cultural experiences from across the world. People gain empathy for those they may have nothing in common with, with places their ancestors may never have heard of or traditions they could never have even dreamt of. Hence, the combination of environmentally driven ecological sites being used as prime tourist destinations leads to the wonderful concept of ecotourism.

Significance of Ecotourism

Ecotourism lets people appreciate the many boons that Mother Earth has bestowed us with. It is the epitome of making people realize the true value of the treasures that we are endangering with our reckless actions. It is the clarion call that resonates within one's soul in a seamless but provocative manner, evoking the basic empathy that is the first step in battling the environmental dangers we are facing in this day and age.

Ecotourism in Thiruvananthapuram

The capital of Kerala is among the best examples of how people can balance the rising influences of urbanization on our culture with our traditional values. From historic locations within the city to a plethora of natural wonders on all sides, people have come together to ensure that the ancient charm and cleanliness of this site has been maintained at all costs. Casual walks and strolls around the area reveal among the most efficient garbage collection services in the entire country. All destinations are strictly regulated, with visitors being reminded of their responsibility and duty in ensuring that these boons of nature remain in the condition we found them, that generations after us can fall in love with them just as we did.

Why Kerala

The majestic trees and peaking wildlife that greet you during your journey are hallmarks of Kerala and its endless bounty of natural beauty. Much of our lore and tradition emanates from these parts, and they are treasure troves of our past and heritage. They are priceless cultural landmarks, behemoths of history and proud jewels that adorn our vast landscape. Kerala and its people have known for a long time the immense responsibility they have inherited from their ancestors; true crusaders who ensured the well-being of this land for centuries. It is now our moment, our time in history, to repay the gifts that the land has blessed us with. Hence, the people and governments at all levels have come together to formulate ways to conserve and protect the myriad floral and faunal species that grace our unique landscape.

Concerted efforts have been made in the last few decades, alongside budgetary allotments and specific policy changes, that has made Kerala one among the pioneers in the Ecotourism movement around the world. Being a region with such an abundance of natural resources, it seems only fitting that we set an example and lead the way in the global resistance against any threats to our environment.
